Demetri Baches, AICP, CNU-A is an expert urbanist.

He is the founder and principal of United States-based Metrocology, Inc., a Strategic Planning, Visioning, Urban Design and Development consultancy established in 2010. His extensive experience in design and city planning, and his drive to see communities excel, led Demetri to build a firm with the skills to discover the value of projects and initiatives based on the inherent strengths of their surrounding communities.

His “town-whispering” approach to analysis and design offers government agencies, private sector and not-for-profit clients a comprehensively managed suite of services, focused on the needs of their specific project, town, or city. Metrocology’s work engages across the full spectrum of project and civic interests, from economic and environmental to social and cultural. Demetri identifies how these interests can be aligned to implement opportunities for development and redevelopment aimed at leveraging the highest project value and best quality of life for local citizens.

The processes and practices required to recognize, embrace and implement Full Spectrum Community Development are the basis for his upcoming book Top Tier Towns: The Six Habits of Highly Successful Communities.
